Yet, barely 10 months after who appeared calm but haggard at Prime Minister Felipe González was re-elected with a wide majority for a second four-year term, many of his supporters are uneasy.

For some, the source of discontent is obvious. Although the economy in Spain is growing faster than most those of the rest of Europe, with inflation down and investment increasing, part of the price of this success has been an unemployment rate that remains at 22 percent and limits put on wage in-

The results, critics of the government said, mean the debate over social and political reform will now be one between the National Party's concept of cautious adjustnents to the apartheid system and through strict racial separation.

Such turnarounds appeared to have shattered the pattern of white politics in South Africa and diluted the effectiveness of the Englishspeaking community in the nationwide anti-apartheid movement, political analysts said.

The electoral swing to the right is being ascribed by most analysis to fears by white voters that racial unrest is increasing.

Because of these fears, the ana-

The result, many moderate antiapartheid activists predicted, is likely to be that President Botha's governing parliamentary caucus will take an even harder line on internal security, based on the strength of its new support from

Kohl Signals Opposition to Moscow Offer

By Robert J. McCartney Bashington Post Service

BONN - Chancellor Helmut Kohl signaled Thursday that his government was leaning against accepting a Soviet proposal to bar an entire class of short-range nuclear missiles from Europe.

In a speech to the Bundestag. Mr. Kohl clearly indicated his overall opposition to the Soviet offer by reaffirming a government call for "equal ceilings at a low level" for short-range missiles.

That implies that some Soviet short-range missiles should remain in Europe and that the United States should retain the right to deploy new ones to match the Sovical sources said.

Mr. Kohl said that West Germa ny would decide on its final position only after consulting its allies. West German officials and political leaders are to discuss the issue next week on visits to the United tates. Britain and France. He also said that West Germany could not reach a firm conclusion until Moscow presents a written proposal on the short-range missiles under discussion, which are those with ranges of 300 to 600 miles (500 to 1,000 kilometers). So far the Kremlin has only decribed its stance orally, and Mr. Kohl said that the Soviet Union had been vague and contradictory about certain important details. The Soviet Union has proposed to bar such missiles in Europe. The U.S. secretary of state. George P. Shultz, has expressed support for Moscow's offer.

Mr. Kohl had not specifically ruled out accepting the Soviet proposal, because the "equal ceilings" could be zero on each side.

"He has worded it so that the Free Democrats can just barely live with it," one official said.

West German indecisiveness over short-range missiles is one of the principal obstacles to progress on a U.S. Soviet accord to remove medium-range missiles from Europe. Medium-range missiles have

Vote Decision Dominates U.K. Politics

On Tuesday, when Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was trying to speak, the uproar grew so loud that the speaker, Bernard Wether-ill, a laconic man, was moved to expand his customary one-word ut-

"Order," Mr. Wetherill began as usual. Then he threw away the script and resorted to pleading *Can we have less euphoria and more listening?" The answer seemed to be no. On Thursday, 10 million or more voters began casting votes in local district councils. Mrs. Thatcher's advisers say the outcome of these elections will be the final factor in determining whether she calls a general election for next month probably on June 11. On Friday, Mrs. Thatcher will receive computer analyses projecting the likely outcome of a general election on the basis of the votes cast nationwide in the local races. She will also have fresh publicopinion polls to round out the picture, since Scotland and most of London will not be holding local elections.

Then on Sunday, Mrs. Thatcher will meet with her political advisers. If she decides to call the election, she will probably follow the pattern established in 1983. That would mean keeping the decision to herself until Monday afternoon, when she would visit Queen Eliza-beth II at Buckingham Palace and request dissolution of Parliament.

In analyzing the local election results, experts say, Mrs. Thatcher will be less interested in the number of district seats each party wins than in the total nationwide vote and the computer projections based on it.

John Curtice, a University of Liverpool professor who studies British voting habits, said, "What she should be looking for is that her national opinion poll percentage is confirmed - that the Conservatives are running at 41 or 42 percent of the vote and 10 to 12 points ahead of Labor." With the approach of the national congres sional elections on May I1, the level of violence has risen as expected, although the figures appear to be lower than in past campaigns.

About 40 killings have been reported, includ-ing those of five candidates among the hun-

General Fidel V. Ramos, the armed forces chief of staff, said this figure was a decrease from the presidential campaign last year, when 156 people were killed. Military sources said the political campaign had also driven up the price of illegal firearms, which now sell for as much as 18,000 pesos, nearly $1,000, for an automatic rifle.

ucles Shi The Democratic budget provides no increase for military spending beyond inflation and shields key domestic programs from deep cuts sought by Mr. Reagan. It was approved on a 56-42 vote.

The budget plan must still go to a conference with the House of Representatives, which adopted a budget last month that contains about $9 billion less in military spending for the 1988 fiscal year.

All 53 Senate Democrats who were present voted for the plan and were joined by three of their liberal Republican colleagues, Lowell P. Weicker Jr. of Connecticut, Robert Stafford of Vermont and John H. Chafee of Rhode Island.

Democratic unity on the budget was achieved only after the Budget Committee chairman, Lawton Chiles, Democrat of Florida, substantially altered the spending plan narrowly approved by his committee last month.

The key change was a $7 billion addition to military spending for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1, which will take effect only if Mr. Reagan signs separate legislation raising taxes by $18.3 billion the first year and $119 billion over four years. The change would allow Pentagon spending to keep pace with inflation.

Also, $2 billion was added to domestic programs to win the support of liberal Democrats concerned about protecting education, health, veterans' and urban development programs.

Senate Republicans, mindful of the president's repeated vows to and industry groups, tax writers see veto any tax increase, bitterly critical Democrats for holding the meet the House and Senate targets military budget "hostage" to a tax increase and predicted that the White House would eventually win the political war, which could stretch through the summer and into the fall.

Republicans see the budget vote as only the first skirmish over a spending plan that still must be implemented by separate legisla-tion that the president could veto. But the dispute over the congressional budget resolution is also part of a larger political battle between the two political parties as they head toward the 1988 campaigns.

Gary Klott of The New York Times reported from Washington: Excise taxes have emerged as the only politically palatable option that congressional tax writers see to raise $18 billion in new revenue to meet the 1988 budget target. Such a move would confront motorists, smokers, drinkers and telephone users with the steepest rise in federal excise taxes ever.

Legislators have dismissed the idea of raising income taxes so soon after last year's overhaul. And in the face of specific threats by President Ronald Reagan to veto any increase in income tax rates, lawmakers say they believe that excise laxes are the only kind that the White House might ultimately ac-

Congress has frequently turned to excise taxes to fill small budget gaps, adding a few pennies to the cost of a pack of cigarettes or a bottle of bourbon to raise a few billion dollars. This year, they are being counted on to raise far more money than that. Congressional tax writers say they must go after several excise tax targets and squeeze them all much tighter than political consider-ations would ordinarily permit in order to raise the $18 billion in new taxes. That is the amount called for by the Senate budget plan and the previously passed House package.

Among the proposals being discussed are a doubling of the cigarette excise tax; an increase in the pasoline tax of 10 cents a gallon or the introduction of a $5-a-barrel oil import fee; as much as a 49-cent increase in the tax on a six-pack of beer, and as much as a 52-cent rise in the tax on a bottle of wine. With such proposals expected to draw heavy fire from consumers with excise taxes, if Mr. Reagan accepts $18 billion in new taxes. Industry lobbyists are already mobilizing. An ad-hoc coalition of industry groups, including the American Automobile Association, the American Truckers Association and two-dozen other trade associations met recently to map strategy to fight fuel tax increases. The truckers' group is also lead-

Breast Cancer and Alcohol Linked

Studies Indicate Even Light Drinking May Increase Risk

Washington Part Service
WASHINGTON — Women who drink alcoholic beverages. even in moderation, are at significantly greater risk of developing breast cancer than women who do not drink, according to two studies published Thursday in the New England Journal of

The studies found that women who had about three drinks a week were approximately one and a half times more likely to develop breast cancer than nondrinkers. The risk rose with the amount of alcohol consumed.

Drinking appeared to affect breast-cancer risk more in younger women than in women who were past menopause.

The findings, which come from large studies, add credence to reports suggesting that alcohol was an important risk factor for the disease.

They prompted the New England Journal of Medicine to sublish an accompanying editorial, which suggested that women with other recognized risk factors "curtail their alcohol ingestion." These factors include obesity, having few children or none before age 25, and a family history of breast cancer. When you've got this kind of consistency" between separate dismissed," said Dr. Arthur Schatzkin, a staff fellow at the National Cancer Institute and is not known why alcohol should increase breast-cancer risk.

Breast cancer is second only to lung cancer as the leading cause of cancer deaths among women in the United States, striking one in 10 at some time in their lives. About 41,000 women will die of the disease in the United States this year, according to the American Cancer Society.

There are as many as 14 studies linking alcohol intake and breast cancer, according to Saxon Graham, chairman of the department of social and preventive medicine at the State University of New York in Buffalo, who wrote the editorial

A second study, by researchers at Harvard Medical School, examined alcohol consumption and breast cancer risk in nurses who completed a detailed dietary questionnaire in 1980.

Of the 89,538 nurses, 601 developed breast cancer in the ensuing four years. Women who had three to nine drinks a week had a 30-percent greater risk of breast cancer than nondrinkers, and those who consumed more than nine drinks a week had a 60percent greater risk.

White House Seeks to Secure Reagan Gains and spend" liberals, he makes it

By Steven V. Roberts WASHINGTON - Around the White House it is sometimes called Operation Legacy. Nobody has issued a statement or made a speech about it. It has no official leaders or organization tables, no offices or telephone num-

But with only 20 months left in Ronald Reagan's presidency. Operation Legacy is a real and increasingly significant concept: a deliberate and organized effort by conservative Republicans to "lock n" many of the gains achieved in Mr. Reagan's six years in office.

Protecting those achievements against Democratic assaults on apitol Hill, an administration official said, is a "very important part of the strategic thinking" in the White House these days.

Speaking of the Democratic leaders, he added: "Look at their budget proposals - they're diametrically opposed to ours. Look at arms control - the liberals in the House are desperately trying to attach amendments to military appropriations bills. Clearly, there's a major attempt in Congress by the Democratic leadership to undo much of what President Reagan has already achieved."

The president himself talks frequently about shoring up his tri-umphs in the remainder of his term, which ends in 1988. Speaking to the American Business Conference re-cently, Mr. Reagan said: "The best way to protect our economic the revolution that we launched when we came here six years ago. And believe me, I intend to do just

The informal and loosely knit effort to work toward that end has occupied White House thinking since the start of Mr. Reagan's second term. But it received new momentum after Howard H. Baker Jr. became chief of staff in February.

The appointment of Mr. Baker, who built a reputation as a pragmatic conciliator in his years as Republican leader in the Senate, caused "universal dismay, gloom and doom" among hard-core right-ists, said Edwin J. Feulner Jr., president of the Heritage Foundation.

Mr. Baker used his conciliatory reputation to advantage when, within weeks, he asked Mr. Feulner, a leading conservative intellectual, to become a part-time White House adviser on domestic policy, Mr. Baker also asked T. Kenneth Cribb Jr., an outspoken conservative with close ties to Attorney General Edwin Meese 3d, to secome assistant to the president for domestic affairs. Mr. Feulner and Mr. Cribb oined Gary L. Bauer, the assistant to the president for policy development, Tony Dolan, the chief speechwriter, and Frank J. Donatelli, the president's chief political adviser, to form a cadre of conservatives within the White House dedicated to keeping an ideological flame burning for the rest of the Reagan presidency. Democrats concede that in some respects, Operation Legacy is working. Huge budget deficits make it almost impossible to suggest significant increases in domestic spending. And Mr. Reagan's ap-pointments to the federal judiciary will guarantee his influence for vears to come. But in others ways, the Democrats say, the Republican effort to protect Mr. Reagan's achievements is doomed to failure.

"There's no way you can lock things in," said an aide to the Democratic leadership in the House of Representatives, "On any bill that comes up, you can revise most of the things done in the past."

The field marshals for Operation Legacy have different responsibilities. Mr. Feulner is conducting an inventory of all cabinet departments and trying to establish priorities for the administration's final months. Mr. Bauer is in charge of producing new ideas, and his most recent suggestion was for a special commission to advise the president on the policy implications of the crisis over acquired immune deficiency syndrome. Mr. Cribb will focus on generating support among conservative activists.

The conservatives know that their ability to protect Mr. Rea-gan's legacy is limited by time and political reality.

The Web of Contempt

As he lay dving testimony in the Iran-contra hearings showed that he was a leader in the Reagan administration's effort to subvert the law and the will of Congress. His terminal illness already had deprived him of any chance to defend himself. With his death, there is need to guard against making him a scapegoat. As the Iran-contra story unravels, it becomes clearer that responsibility is more widespread than the administration will yet admit.

Richard Secord, a retired general, is telling the Senate and House committees that his arms networking, which the administration has called private enterprise, was much more than a rogue operation run by Lieu-tenant Colonel Oliver North. In fact it had plenty of prestigious and official support.

Others now make the same point. One is Lewis Tambs. who resigned as ambassador to Costa Rica amid suggestions that he gave impermissible military help to the Nicaraguan rebels. Saying he would not take the rap alone, he insisted his orders came from authorized channels: a tight group of policy makers that included Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams and Alan Fiers, head of the CIA's Central American Task Force.

Who knew? How many high administration officials were involved in the extensive effort to funnel aid to the contras, even after the Congress forbade it?

This painful accounting, as Senator Dan-

What a sad epitaph for William Casey. iel Inouve stated in opening the hearings. does not merely concern secret operations. It concerns secret foreign policy that tra-duced stated foreign policy, like the refusal to pay ransom for hostages, as well as the ban on arms for the contras.

It is not yet clear how large and central was William Casey's role in these operations. But at a minimum he was guilty of knowing that broad evasions of law were under way and yet, we are told, not telling the president, much less Congress.

General Secord tells an amazing story of the privatized power he wielded as a White House agent. The general played the role of a "commercial cutout," dressing up the Iran arms deals as private financial transactions because unconcealed government-to-government dealings would have violated the law and embarrassed both sides. His account is but the latest evidence that knowledge of Iran-contra was widespread. Such an operation is impossible unless key officials from various government agencies participate and systematically deceive and disobey Congress.

Mr. Casey's widely known distrust of the Senate and House Intelligence committees set a tone for an administration that decided for itself that Congress had no right to restrict the executive branch in national security matters. But it is already too late to blame him, or any one person. Who knew? Every day, the web of contempt widens. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Amends, 45 Years Later

The Smithsonian Institution is not often in the middle of political controversy. But an exhibit planned by one of its museums - the National Museum of American History - in connection with the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution has caused a stir. That is because it raises the painful question of how, under the constitution, it was possible for the United States to intern Japanese-Americans during World War II. We think the museum is right to go ahead with the exhibit, despite some protest. The questions it raises are worth debating.

Americans of Japanese ancestry - citizens as well as legal aliens — who had been neither charged nor convicted of any wrongdoing, were summarily shipped off to detention camps in 1942. For many years after the war had ended, there was little public discussion of the policy. Military authorities said the evacuation had been necessary to protect the West Coast, and even the Supreme Court ratified the harsh decision. Some small payments were subsequently made by the government to compensate for tangible losses — about $37 million in all - but most evacuees lost nomes and businesses or sold them for a pittance during the brief time they were given to pack up. No compensation can ever be made for the years spent in confinement, for the terrible stigma of imprisonment or for the injustice that was inflicted.

Some steps have been taken recently. President Gerald Ford, in 1976, acknowledged that a mistake had been made. Courts have overturned some convictions for violating exclusion orders, and new civil suits for damages have been litigated. These may not succeed because of the statute of limitations, but the Congress can still respond to recommendations made by a special commission in 1983 and vote to compensate the victims.

About half of the original 120,000 internees are still living. A Senate bill with 69 cosponsors and a House bill with 137 have leadership backing, and momentum. Both call for a formal apology to individuals and some payment both personal and into a general trust fund. Those who have doubts about the need to make amends should visit the Smithsonian exhibit this summer.

Botha and the Far Right

As he had wagered when he called early elections, President Pieter Botha maintained his majority. But this victory has a bitter taste because of the clear success of the extreme right, ready to fight by any means against the prudent reformism of the ruling National Party.

The rise of the extremists is troublesome for the head of state. But he can use it to plead the need for prudence before those in the West who complain. The relative defeat of the liberals will reinforce him in his conviction that his party alone is capable of making the country evolve in accord with the majority of whites.

Bad Old Habits in Portugal

The dissolution of the Portuguese parliament presents an opportunity and a danger for the poorest member of the European nity. There is reason to hope that the election July 19 will help to consolidate the advances made in the past four years toward stabilizing what, before, had been a democracy of continuous cabinet crises. Yet the manner in which the minority government of Anibal Cavaco Silva was brought down last month was a reversion to the bad old days. Straightforward politicking caused General Antonio Ramalho Eanes, a former president, to withdraw the support of the Democratic Renewal Party from Dr. Cavaco Silva. Portugal will not be able to confront the European challenge if General Eanes's coup were to signal a return to the political merry-go-round which, so far, has given the country 19 governments since the overthrow of dictatorship in 1974. - The Financial Times (London).

Sawing Into the Limb

Sinking the saw's teeth a few inches deeper into the limb on which the U.S. economy is resting, the House passed its much heralded trade bill last week - complete with the Gephardt amendment, which would require mandatory sanctions against countries with 'excess and unwarranted" trade surpluses with the United States. The bill is an unmitigated disaster. Richard Gephardt certainly drew a lot of attention by introducing his outrageous amendment to the already bad bill but may have disqualified himself as a responsible candidate for office.

P ARIS — Britain today has an even more sensational political scandal than Irangate. The British scandal poses the same problems of secret power and accountability, and of what an individual should do when conviction clashes with an elected government's policies.

The affair is of alleged treason, among other high crimes. An element in the British security service. MI5, is said to have conspired to undermine two British governments at the beginning of the 1970s.

The story is set forth by a former MI5 officer, Peter Wright. He claims that about 30 members of MI5, politically motivated, conspired to overthrow the Labor government of Prime Minister Harold Wilson and tried to discredit the Conservative government of Edward Heath. Sir Harold was held to have about him people working for the KGB, or even to be himself compromised by the Soviet or other East-bloc intelligence services. Mr. Heath was thought insufficiently anti-Communist.

Mr. Wright says that the CIA was also involved, and that he and his colleagues "bugged and burgled our way across London" for five years. He says that he himself committed 23 criminal acts and 12 acts of treason in the course of the affair.

One interpretation of all this is that it was simply a rogue operation by extreme rightists in the secret service. Another argument holds that, whatever the operation became, it began with authorization at highest MI5 levels, based on credible information concerning Mr. Wilson or his asso-ciates, and that "far from being a conspiracy to bring down an elected government, the operation was aimed at protecting that government from danger by subversive agents" (to quote an anonymous apologist for MI5). The phrasing of this explanation is not without ambiguities. The underlying question is an im-portant one: What does a responsible security service do if it has good reason to think that a nation's leader is compromised by foreign agents or unshakably under their influence? What does it do if its officers become convinced that the executive arm of government, to which it owes obedience, is itself insecure? What do responsible officials do if they believe that their government's policies actually betray the nation?

The last question transports us from London to Washington, and to the Irangate hearings. In Washington, officials took policy in their own hands, convinced that a congressional ban on U.S. government support treme cases in the MI5 and Irangate for the Nicaraguan contras was wrong and that they had a duty, or a right, to break the law. Even if these people acted with President Reagan's implied endorsement, the problem posed is that of individuals in government who come to believe that they possess a private grasp, lacking to the public, of some great issue, and that they have a moral obligation to do something about it even if this requires breaking the law. If a democratic nation freely elects for itself a course toward ruin, do responsible people inside the govern-such extreme circumstances? The key distinction seems to me to be between moral issues and political ones. It is a recognizable distinction ment have to go along with this?

What does an honorable person do in even if the two often overlap.

An official seems to me obliged to confront, fight and, in the extreme case, disobey or subvert an immoral national policy. This involves many prudential considerations, but the principle seems to me unassailable. The obvious modern case in point is that of the July 20 conspirators in the wartime German government who tried to overthrow Hitler.

But we are not talking about ex-who interfere with elected governments on political or security grounds, and do so when there are Iternative courses available within the political system. That this occurs, and possibly is occurring more often than the public thinks, is a disquieting matter. To employ secret powers to thwart the policy of an elected legislature or to undermine a government, thereby denying the public will, is an act destructive of representative government. To the individuals involved, of course, things are never so clear. When they possess power for which they are not publicly accountable, the possibilines offered by that power can become intoxicating. That is what happened in Washington, and it may be what happened in Britain. We may never know in the British case. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher refuses to offer a full explanation or to order an inquiry.

Americans, not to speak of the British, are inclined to be complacent. Each scandal is interpreted as a reassurance that "the system is working."
One wonders if there may not be more occasions than we know when it did not work; and if we can so confidently rely on it to continue working.

A Doghouse With Room For Bonn

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON — On the economic beat here in Washington, there is a feeling things are spinning out of control. The dollar is worth less and less in international markets, despite the efforts of central banks to mop up surplus dollars dumped by anxious investors. With a cheaper dollar come the threats of inflation as other curren-cies appreciate, of higher interestiv-rates and, eventually, of recession. A worrisome part of the picture is that Congress, furious over Japan's huge trade surplus, is about to shoot itself, and the country, in the foot with a protectionist trade bill. That may persuade the Japanese to pull back on their equally huge financial invest-ments in America that have been financing the U.S. budget deficit. There is something more: To many, an unremitting weakening of the dol-lar — until recently part of the policy of an administration fighting a debilitating trade deficit — may symbolize a crisis of confidence in America. The Federal Reserve Board chairman. Paul Volcker, turns out, incidentally, to be a seer: When Treasury Secretary James Baker and the other finance ministers started the process of talking the dollar down at the famous New York meeting on Sept. 22, 1985, Mr. Volcker grumbled publicly that once the process was started, it would not be easy to stop.

Akio Morita of Sony Corp., that canny operator of businesses in Japan, Europe and the United States, said to me the other day: "You Americans should worry about the dollar. It is not a good sign when it goes down so far - it means that everybody's investments in America are worth less than before." Yet the nation rushes ahead. Many economists predict that without a turnaround in the trade deficit, the dollar, having lost more than half its value against the yen and the Deut-sche mark in the last two years, may fall a further 15 to 20 percent.

Suddenly, Mr. Baker and the other finance ministers are discovered to have no clothes: Their promises to coordinate their nations' policies to stabilize currencies "around current ".

levels" are proving meaningless.

In the case of Mr. Baker and the Japanese finance minister, Kiichi Miyazawa, the reason is that they do not control the political processes in their countries. Mr. Baker cannot deliver a tax increase from his president or a budget reduction from Congress. And Mr. Miyazawa is powerless to get the votes in the Japanese parliament for a big fiscal expansion.

The German case is different. Finance Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg and his associates in the Kohl government agree completely: West Germany simply refuses the demands of the rest of the world to boost its economy. It stubbornly pursues a selfish commitment to preserve at all costs — including a global recession — its less-than-zero inflation record.

In an extremely disappointing speech in Washington, the West German economics minister, Martin Bangemann, told America on April 28 to go fly a kite. Don't talk to us about a fiscal expansion, he said.

Yet Mr. Volcker, Mr. Baker, the ... White House economic adviser, Beryl Sprinkel, the World Bank -- even some top West German think tanks know that Bonn can and should be doing more in its own interest and for global economic health.

The Germans are maddeningly selfcontent. Mr. Bangemann plainly was enjoying seeing Japan in the dog-house. Yet West Germany, too, has a big export-driven surplus. A confidential staff paper produced for the meeting in Paris next week of finance ministers from the OECD countries says that West Germany must join Japan in a vigorous expansion while America cuts its budget deficit, or the huge international imbalances will not be reduced in the foreseeable future. That, in effect, is a forecast of a dollar collapse.

A key official of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, discussing the staff paper by phone, said that the case for West German economic expansion is even stronger than it was a few months ago. Japan has at least announced a new package" of stimulatory measures, "and we must wait to see how that turns out," he said.

The OECD meeting will be the last chance before the economic summit meeting next month in Venice for the finance ministers to try to restore confidence in their ability to cope with the crisis. Not much may come of it, but one result is certain: For a change, accusing fingers will be pointing to-ward Bonn rather than Tokyo.

The Gulf: The Soviets Are There in Surprising Force

OSLO - When you talk with So-viet officials about their rivalry with the United States, they maintain that they have no foreign bases. To arrive at that remarkable conclusion they leave aside Soviet installations in Eastern Europe and Mongolia, to say nothing of Afghanistan.

Although the Soviet presence in the Gulf area should not be exaggerated, it is more extensive than most people realize. In peacetime, Soviet facilities in Ethiopia and South Yemen aid deployments in the Indian Ocean; in event of war, they would put Soviet forces close to the Red Sea. The Soviet effort to expand into the Middle East has not been a joyride. It began in the mid-1950s, with the sending of equipment through Czechoslo-vakia to Egypt. Exploiting Egyptian etunity with Israel, President Gamal Abdel Nasser's ambitions and Western stupidity, the Soviets built a considerable presence in Egypt. With time, the Egyptians found their Soviet advisers intolerable. When Anwar Sadat finally expelled them in 1972, they moved their operations to Somalia. When the Kremlin decided to support Ethiopia in the struggle over the Ogaden, the Somalis told the Russians to pack up. They shifted operations to South Yemen, Although the Soviets seem well entrenched in Ethiopia and South Ye-

Having built a substantial navy. Moscow inevitably wanted to operate in the Indian Ocean. It began doing so regularly in the late 1960s, about the time the British announced their withdrawal from east of Suez. Operating out of Vladivostok was difficult. The acquisition of the U.S.-built base at Cam Ranh Bay in Vietnam has helped. Even that, though, is distant from the Middle East.

The Soviet Navy is dependent on facilities in South Yemen and Ethiopia for operations in the Indian Ocean. When it began to operate there, it could only remain for about five months. It now operates year-round. It is not easy to get detailed information regarding Soviet activities in Ethiopia and South Yemen. There have been press reports about naval activities on the Dahlak Islands off the Ethiopian coast: some reports maintain that the Soviet facilities there are extensive. But the 1987 edition of the Pentagon report "Soviet Military Power" refers to them as small. The Soviet Union and South Yemen maintain that the Russians have no bases in that country, but this is a matter of semantics. They make extensive use of the port of Aden and various Yemeni airfields. There are reports that they are developing naval facilities at Mukalla, east of Aden.

The Soviets cannot be very comfortable with South Yemen. Plagued with tribal and ideological rivalries, it has had one revolution after another. In the most recent, early last year, the Soviets found it difficult to choose sides. Once they did, according to the Pentagon's 1987 report, Soviet pilots flew combat missions to support the revolutionaries, and Soviet aircraft transported Cuban troops from Ethiopia, which helped drive the government forces into North Yemen The Soviets have not found it easy to reconcile their activities in South Yemen with their courtship of other Arab nations. Yet they have been conducting a major effort to establish diplomatic relations. They now have relations with all Arab countries except Saudi Arabia, Qatar and Bahrain.

The circumstances in which the Soviets would deploy substantial combat forces to Ethiopia or South Yemen are uncertain. They have, however, demonstrated that they are ready for such a contingency. In late 1977 and early 1978 they conducted a large deployment of equipment by air to Ethiopia. Since then they have carried out exercises related to the deployment of several divisions to South Yernen,

Like the Pentagon, the Soviet general staff would have to coordinate the activities of several commands for any military operations in the Gulf area. Even if Soviet leaders have no current plans to deploy forces to the Gulf area, circumstances could arise that would force their hand. The most dangerous situation would be if these deployments coincided with U.S. deployments. This would not necessarily lead to a conflict between the superpowers, but the world could have its most serious crisis since Nikita Khrushchev moved missiles into Cuba. 1912: French Gun Laws PARIS - The endless series of shooting affrays in Paris recently once more has brought the question of the carrying of firearms to the front. Various proposals have been made to put an end to this dangerous practice, but, as no official action has been taken, it is still legal for gunsmiths to sell firearms to all comers. The action just brought by the tutor of a young girl named Paquerette Pascal may, however, establish a new jurisprudence as far as the civil responsibility of gunsmiths is con-cerned. On Dec. 3, Mme. Pascal went to a gunsmith, purchased a revolver, proceeded to her apartment and shot her husband dead in his sleep. The summons points out that, though the gunsmith must have suspected that his customer was going to make a unlawful use of the weapon she pur-chased, he did not try to prevent it.

Hooked on Money: Treatment Is Needed

N EW YORK — How much money is enough? How can people who earn more than $1 million a year need money so badly that they are prepared to break laws to get even more? There are obvious reasons: a craving for power, to name one. But what most of us overlook is the fact that some people actually get "high" and "hooked" on money in the same way that others become addicted to alcohol. cocaine and other drugs. An injection of money can make people feel instantly secure, victorious, strong, loved, proudand sexually attractive. Money becomes the antidote to a feeling of insufficiency.

An investment banker who was recently indicted in an insider trading scandal was said to be haunted by his father's bankruptey even though his annual income was more than $2 million. He gained pride and respectability through lavish spending. He also went into debt and began providing illegal information to an arbitrageur.

Others crave money to buy relationships. They inevitably pick up the check at restaurants and buy expensive gifts. Their desire to be needed and loved leads some of them to make large charitable donations. Other money addicts are hoarders, and get high on the sense of security gained from counting their riches. Competitive addicts need to make "big numbers" as a sign of masculinity, and other addicts think money makes them wiser. In "Fiddler on the Roof." Te-ye said. "When you're By Jay B. Rohrlich

A nonaddict can enjoy the good feelings that come with making, accumulating and spending money, but the elation is always tempered with the acceptance of reality's limitations. The addict, however, lights limits and may feel belittled by them. Time is a particularly upsetting restriction. Patience is often viewed as an enemy rather than an ally. I know of one wealthy executive who steals newspapers from a newsstand rather than wait behind the person ahead of him. Another successful but debt-ridden stock broker became so panicked and enraged when a bank officer told him his loan application had been rejected that he had to be restrained by guards and forcibly removed from the bank. His reaction was every bit as extreme as that of a heroin addict denied his fix.

Thinking in terms of money addiction rather than greed puts the problem into a clinical rather than moral framework. We must make value judgments about conduct that breaks laws and hurts others, but a clinical attitude keeps the focus on the humanity of offenders. Defining alcoholism as a disease rather than a sign of moral decadence has led to successful treatment strategies. If money addicts were seen in this light, personal and organizational tragedies could be prevented.

A broker came to Wall Street hoping that wealth could buy him the sexual confidence he had always lacked. By the age of 25, he was earning almost $500,000 a year. The euphonic power of so much money took over as an end in itself. He experienced the "highs" of wealth without any foundation under them. He spent every cent he made, and borrowed against the expectation that the earnings would never stop. When he had his first reversals, he frantically began to cheat and steal, not unlike any other desperate junkie. Once caught, he became suicidal. He also lost hundreds of thousands of dollars for his firm. But a conspiracy of silence had surrounded this obviously troubled man as long as he was bringing the money in. This is the sad part. By the time the problem was acknowledged, it was too late to prevent a disaster.

The first step in the cure of addictions is to confront the usual denial that a problem exists. All addicts believe that they can will their habits away. It is also much easier for them to justify cravings for something that society rewards. That is what makes money addiction so dangerous. It is time to recognize it as a potentially desperate condition, and to develop treatments for it. Money addicts are a danger not only to themselves; in their self-destruction, they take loved ones and colleagues down with them.

But we do not have to approve of each other's decisions. The very fact that The Herald is a good newspaper makes it important to speak out.

I think that in the end the decision made by the paper's editors will hurt The Herald, the public vision of the press and the way we in journalism see ourselves and our purpose in life. There are two journalistic issues in the matter. One is whether the story about Mr. Hart and his visitor should have been printed. I think the answer is yes, but. Yes, because Americans are interested in the character of candidates for the presidency, and rightly or wrongly they take sexual conduct as an indication of character. And because Mr. Hart took a risk that may tell something about what

A Better Version

E VEN if Gary Hart flunked a minor test of presidential "character," The Miami Herald flunked a different test when it staked out his house. This is the stuff of which totalitarian journalism could quickly be made.

In a better story, what would happen is that Miami Herald reporters catch FBI agents lurking in the shrubbery near a politician's house and expose them as gross violators of privacy. Then the Her-ald's editorialists, citing that old a-man's-home-is-his-castle business, blast official snoopers to kingdom come.

Unfortunately, in the real story, the a little sweaty, trying to defend what press has ceased to be a watchdog for cannot be defended in the name of jourprivacy and has become just another instrument of its officious violation. — Syndicated cohunnist Edwin Yoder.

That is the second and more significant journalistic issue. We keep calling for openness from everybody else and we should be as open as we can in the way we gather news. We do not have to tell who our sources are, but I believe that we should not do what is repugnant to decent social conduct.

To me that means we should not masquerade - pretend we are meter-readers when we want to get into a house. Other editors disagree; at least one Pulitzer, Prize has been won by a newspaper for an investigation during which staff members used false identities.

I do not believe we should pretend not to be reporters when calling for information. I do not believe we should wire our clothes and bodies to get news. That is for the police, and if journalists act like the police they are betraying their role. And I do not believe that staking out a politician without his knowledge, lurking in the streets and cars through the night, is decent conduct for anybody

In part, this is simply a matter of caste. It is not to my taste to hang around somebody's house in the middl of the night to see who goes in and out. It shows a lack of self-respect, a commod-ity a journalist does not have to give up he gets his press card.

It is also a matter of protection of journalism and the First Amendment, both of which have plenty of enemies as it is. If a reputable paper like The Miami Herald indulges in sneaking and snoop-ing that its editors would never tolerate around their own homes, that is bad.

But if the rest of the press justifies it, that is worse. We are begging the nation to treat as as unworthy of respect. In time, without any question, we will lose the support of the American public in our constant straggles against those who would crode the First Amendment. We cannot claim it was designed for voyeurs.

What would have happened if The Miami Herald had refused to print the story without getting all the facts, refused to scattle around in a way that would get a stranger tossed out of the paper's own building? Why, it would have had to delay the story and maybe lose it to a competitor. A story that juicy would get around and The Herald might have come in second. But its editor never would have had to appear on television, nervous and

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

On a Visa Denied, and on Those Admitted by America

Regarding the editorials "Waldheim Is Unwelcome" (April 29) and "Meese's Brave Stance" (April 30):

In the United States, as in most democratic countries, one is innocent until proven guilty. That requires producing evidence of the alleged guilt. Without the "impressive evidence" being handed over, the gesture of branding the president of Austria becomes an empty one.

Soon after the surrender of Nazi Germany in May 1945, the U.S. authorities started "rewriting" the wartime records of many scientists in order to facilitate their entry into the United States. They were admitted not as fugitives from communism, but to gain the military and scientific secrets left among the spoils of the Third Reich. Those among them who were Nazis will not be sought out, stripped of their fraudulently obtained citizenship or deported.

It is sobering and sorrowful that the United States, with its its gallant role in delivering Europe from Nazi occupation, has only recently seen fit to change its policy from allowing haven to Nazis to denying it to them. In the light of history, does the United States have the right to take a moral stand on this issue?

Swiss Canton to Study Suffrage for Women

The men of Appenzell. Switzerland's only remaining canton in which women are not allowed to vote, may have to accept wom-en's suffrage, although not this

Last month, male residents voted on local issues as they have for centuries, raising their hands in the town squares of the German-speaking mountain canton in eastern Switzerland. But local officials, faced with the growing protests of Appenzell's women, plan to form a committee of about 20 men and women to study women's suffrage. The study is expected to last about two years, and officials say it is unlikely women will be voting before the early 1990s.

Although Swiss women won the right to vote in national elections in 1971, it was left up to the country's 26 cantons to grant women a say in local affairs. Appenzell is the only canton where men still refuse to do so. They have rejected the idea four times in the last 12 years.

With the pressure growing, some men in Appenzell contend that the town squares are too small for assemblies of both men and women, and that the women's colorful dress clashes with the sobriety of the voting cere-

Daffodil Replenishment

There has always been a lively debate as to precisely where the wandering William Wordsworth spotted his "host of golden daffodils," but the vision is to be recreated by the National Trust at Gowbarrow in the Lake District of England, near where the poet lived and wrote. Thousands of wild daffodil bulbs are to be planted to help replace those enten by sheep and picked by tourists, the Trust said.

Stradivari Month in Cremona

The city of Cremona will mark the 250th anniversary of Antonio Stradivari's death this year with a month of concerts by some of the world's most celebrated violinists playing Stradivari instruments. Italian violinist Salvatore Accardo will play in an unusual performance of Vivaldi's "Four Seasons" in which all the stringed instruments, not just those of the soloists, will be Stradivarii — considered the finest ever made. Other musicians to take part in 12 concerts between Aug. 26 and Sept. 28 include Pinchas Zukerman, Yo Yo Ma, Cho Liang Lin, Henryk Szeryng, Anne Sophie Mutter, Gideon Kremer and Carlo Maria Giulini.

Collectors and musicians from all over the world have agreed to lend violins and other Stradivari instruments for an exhibition. Stradivari, born in 1644, produced about 1,200 violins, violas, cellos, viols, guitars, mandolins and lutes during his life, and about 650 of them still exist, according to historians.

The city also will offer an exhibition of scores and nusic books of the period, and international conferences and workshops on Stradivari, his music and his time—plus the problems of restoring antique instruments.

Anthony Quinn and three of his sons will act in an Italian film on the violin-maker's life, to be shot partly in Cremona; there will be records, a catalogue of Stradivati's instruments, commemorative medals and stamps.

New Tracks for Cyclists

Tom Sheehan of Off the Deep End Travels, of Jackson, Wyoming, is one of a growing number of tour organizers offering bicycling adventures on almost every continent. Self-described as a "hardcore outdoorsman," Sheehan and his partner were determined to find new and different pedaling places, and now list cycling itineraries that include Japan, the Fiji Litands and Tahiti.

and his parties were determined to mo new and different pedaling places, and now list cycling itineraries that include Japan, the Fiji Islands and Tahiti.

David Mozer of Bellevue, Washington, a former Peace Corps volunteer in Africa, established Bicycle Africa four years ago and personally leads a secses of five annual tours to East and West Africa. Open Road Bicycle Tours of Haymarket, Virginia, is leading cycling groups to China, where the bicycle is still a vital daily form of transportation. American Youth Hostels takes cyclists of any age to New Zealand.

Here is a selection of of some of the unusual cycling trips:

of Japan: A 15-day look at Old Japan in a route that moves generally north from Osaka to the Buddhist center of Nikko outside Tokyo. Departure: Oct. 4. Price $1,475 per person, which includes lodging and two meels a day. Air fare to Japan is additional. Trips also available to Tahin and Fiji. Off the Deep End Travels, P.O. Box ↑ 7511, Jackson, Wyoming. 83001-9971, (800) 223-6833.

■ Papua New Guinea. As far as Tom Sheehan of Off

Papua New Guinea. As far as Tom Sheehan of Off the Deep End Travels knows, the three-week Papua New Guinea adventure is a first for bicycling and is open to strong cyclists only. From the capital city of Port Moresby, the group will head inland "up dirt roads, then jungle tracks and finally alpine hiking trails" to cross the Whartan Mountains. Mountain bicycles with wide, knobby tires and special gears are essential.

Returning to more conventional roads, the second leg of the trip will explore the scenic, and more populated, highlands of the country. Here accommodations will be in hotels. Departure for the full trip: July 29. The land cost is $1,050 per person. Air fare to Papua New Guinea is extra. Deep End is considering similar expeditions to Thailand and Indonesia in 1988.

West Africa: A two-week and a four-week trip are offered this year on an itinerary — depending on the tour — that visits Liberia, the Ivory Coast (see photograph), Ghana, Togo and Benin. There is a strong emphasis on meeting local people and learning the history and culture of the region.

Departure for the 15-day trip is Nov. 21, and the inclusive land price is $700. Departure for the 30-day trip is Dec. 19, and the land price is $1,050. On both trips, air fare to Togo is additional. Bicycle Africa, International Bicycle Fund, 4247 135th Place Southeast, Bellevue, Washington, 98006, (206) 746-1028.

• China: The two 25-day itineraries offered by Open Road enter China via Beijing and exit at Hong Kong. Both feature accommodations in guest houses and Westernstyle hotels with private baths. Because China is such a large country, some traveling within its horders is done by plane, train and bus. But there is also plenty of villageto-village cycling.

The "Yangtze Valley Adventurer" is a first-timer's overview of China. Stops include Xian, site of the army of terra-cotta warriors; Suzhou, the famed City of Gardens; and cosmopolitan Shanghai. Departure: Sept. 18. The land cost is $2.250 per person.

The "South China Explorer" focusses on the south-western Chinese province of Yunnan, where cyclists will take rides "out into the countryside to visit pagodas, lakes or local communes." Trieste's Grand Canal, only three blocks long, leads from the sea to the church of Sant'Antonio, with Serbian orthodox church to the right.

by Alan Levy

RIESTE, Italy — The Balkans begin at Trieste.
And while James Joyce, who wrote the first chapter of "Ulysses" at Via Bramante 4 in 1914, and Giuseppe Verdi, who composed and conducted an early opera. "Stiffelio," for its premiere in 1850 in what is now the Teatro Verdi, could cough at the congestion and cacophony of today's traffic, they might still relish the noble incongruity of a monumental Hapsburg city set on a sparkling Adrianic waterfront. Here north Italian bustle and Slovenian smolder do business together and lately, at least, live in peace.

A stepchild of Italy deposited by history on the doorstep of Yugoslavia, Trieste — just off the main route between Venice and Vienna—is still standing tall as a Central Europe southern seaport. Israeli fruit, Middle Eastern and African coffee enter Europe here; Italian trucks are shipped out to Greece and Turkey. In Verdi's and Joyce's times, Trieste was the gateway from West to East; now it's the East's doorway to the West, as day trippers from Yugoslavia throng the markets outside the railroad station and along the Piazza Ponterosso on the Grand Canal, snatching up blue jeans and auto

A tradition of tolerance has served Trieste well throughout its turbulent history, which includes 537 years as part and port of Austria. Emperor Franz Joseph seems less stern and austere when he's called Franco Giuseppe. Trieste's Grand Canal (only three blocks long) is crowned by the Roman Catholic Church of Sant'Antonio, which looks like a Greek temple, but is dominated by the five blue Byzantine domes of the Serbian Orthodox Church along the side. Around the corner, showing an unimposing Italian neoclassic face to the port, is a large Greek Orthodox Church glittering with icons framed in gold and silver. Trieste claims to be the only city in Italy with a Moslem cemetery. Its synagogue — built in 1912 in Assyrian-Babylonian style with two rose windows encircling the Star of David — holds 5,000, though the Jewish community now numbers 600.

Despite the traffic outside, "Trieste today is an immensely livable city," says a guide. Giovanni Paoletti. "With a population of a quarter of a million, it has the services and cultural life of a city of a million." Regular tour-bus departures, however, are not among Trieste's services: instead, one contacts the Guides Association at the Stazione Maritima, Molo Bersaglieri 3, as much in advance as possible. A licensed guide in any language for one to 20 persons will cost a total of 60,000 lire (about $46) for half a day or $5,000 for a full day, not including admissions, transport and meals.

Trieste's wealth and grandeur can best be viewed during business hours by tiptoeing into the ornate palace headquarters of insurance companies such as that of RAS at Piazza della Repubblica 1, with its mosaics, statuary, and gilded ceilings, or the powerful palace of the Lloyd Triestino shipping line on the city's waterfront parade ground and main square, Piazza Unità. Just going to the main post office on Piazza Vittorio Veneto to buy a stamp involves climbing a grand staircase and trying not to stumble while gazing up at a tinted glass ceiling. The harbor hotel where Verdi rested between bouts with "Stiffelio" is now a bank.

A quality of life from more prosperous times persists. Merchants' houses — each with a wide doorway to allow delivery of goods to a ground-floor shop or warehouse while the family lived above on the piano nobile (principal story) — are now divided into flats and offices, but the scale stays large even if the dimensions dwindle. On the second floor of Via San Nicolò 30, where James Joyce and Nora Barnacle rented rooms with a Jewish family until their son Giorgio was born in 1905, the apartment remains divided — into Body Club and a dental

Joyce spent 10 years in Trieste, where he taught English for Berlitz. One of his pupils was a local businessman named Ettore Schmitz, who wrote psychological novels—most notable, "The Confessions of Zeno"—under the name of Italo Svevo. His fiction—introspective, narcissistic, witry, and virtually unknown until championed by Joyce—influenced his tutor immensely. "In Italian, at least, Svevo invented the interior monologue, which Joyce brought to fruition in 'Ulysses,' " says Gerald Parks, an American poet teaching at the University of Trieste. "And parts of 'Ulysses' and 'Finnegans Wake' are written in the local dialect, Triestino, Joyce also made contact with psychoanalysis in Trieste, which was the lirst place in Italy where Freud's ideas took hold."

ONG before Svevo and Joyce—or, for that matter, Rilke, who wrote his favorite verses, "Duiness Elegies," in the castle of Duino just outside the city, and Stendhal, who came here as French consul in 1830—Trieste was ahead of its times. It was already known as Tergeste, (from the Sanskrit word terg, meaning market) in 177 B.C. when Roman legions conquered a fierce people called the Istri, who took little time to assimilate and prosper as Romans. In 33 B.C., Tergeste was forthird as a walled city; themseforth its oldest landmark. Riccardo's Arch, has served as gateway to the Old City. Nobody knows who Riccardo.

From Roman times, Trieste still has its Capitoline hill, a forum, and an amphitheater built Greek style into the hill of San Giusto rather than a walled entity in Roman tradition. This quarter is called Rena, derived from Arena, though no Christians battled lions here. Christianity came in 394, when the Roman Emperor of the East, Theodosius the Great, a Christian, defeated the pagan barbarian legions of the Roman Emperor of the

When you first handle a Patek Philippe, you become aware that this watch has the presence of an object of rare perfection.

We know the feeling well. We experience it every time a Patek Philippe leaves the hands of our craftsmen. You can call it pride. For us it lasts a moment; for you,

We made this watch for you – to be part of your life – simply because this is the way we've always made watches.

And if we may draw a conclusion from five generations of experience, it will be this: choose once but choose well.

A Patek Philippe – because it's for a lifetime.

Bargains in Rental Cars Abound in Buyers' Market

by Roger Collis

F you think that value for money in air travel bears no relation to how much you pay, take a look or car rental. Competition has made it a buyer's market, yet even savvy travelers fail to drive a bargain. This is not a matter of price alone. You may be more concerned with service. quality and convenience. It's more a matter of deciding what you want and figuring out the best deal before you hit the rental desk. I arned a lesson when I rented a car from Hertz at Heathrow on a "time and mileage" rate. I was not aware that after two days the entire rental became chargeable at an unlimited mileage rate - vastly more expensive as I was mainly using the car on short trips in London. I was angry with the bill. "You'd have been just as an angry with Avis," says Andrew James, director of marketing for Avis in England, "You have to know which product you want in advance. If you had wanted a car for one day but for a long distance — the reverse of the case that you've described — you could have taken our unlimited mileage 'one way-one day' tariff."

Figuring the best deal before you reach the desk

Renting a car from one of the firms with a desk inside the airport terminal is convenient but can cost you up to 50 percent more than renting from the same firm's downtown office or one of the so-called "off-airport" firms a short ride away by courtesy bus.

If price were the only factor, firms like Avis and Hertz would rapidly end up at the bottom of the heap. What also counts is the number of locations, being able to rent a car in Paris and dropping it off in Munich: tieins with frequent flier bonus programs and other links with airlines and hotel chains; a wide choice of cars, from a Ford Fiesta to a top of the line Mercedes; and high-tech frills such as self-service rental and return.

The big-name firms are turning to hightech in an attempt to avoid price wars in what has largely become a commodity market. For example, frequent travelers can phone in a number which allows the rental agreement to be printed out in advance. All you need to show is your driving license. Avis has introduced a fully automatic system in some locations. Simply by inserting your charge card into a computer terminal before your flight leaves, you can check your reservation, choose the car you want and get a printout showing where it is in the parking lot. Returning the car is just as easy. You fuel gauge reading into the terminal and receive a detailed record of the transaction. Hertz offers computerized driving instructions in eight languages at all major Europe-in airports and rents portable cellular phones to business car customers. Avis goes one better for its customers in Britain by offering a phone free: you only pay for the calls. And so it goes.

What irritates many people who rent cars is finding that the price has just about doubled when all those extras are added up -collision damage waiver (this can vary from to 20 percent depending on the firm and the country), personal accident insurance and local taxes (for example, 15 percent in England, 25 percent in Belgium and 3315 percent in France) Many firms market a business package with unlimited mileage and no hidden extras (VAT is sometimes quoted separately). For example. Budget has a Business Traveler Program at most major cities in Europe, the Middle East and Africa; Europear Plus is available in Europe and the Middle East for top of the range cars; Heruz has its Business Class tariff with a free "rent there" is the program of the progra it here, leave it there" service at major cities in Europe on rentals of more than 48 hours, discounts with certain hotels and the chance o participate in "Passport to Leisure." a bonus points program with free rentals throughout Western Europe, and Avis has a European Business Class (minimum one-day rental for "Group C" cars - such as a Ford Sierra - and upwards. (One of the best deals is a tariff designed for tourists, Avis's Super Value, a kind of APEX, which offers unlimited mileage and can save you up to 30 percent off Avis's standard rate. The minimum rental is three days and it must be reserved seven days in advance.)

Inclusive rates like these can save you money, especially if you're driving long dis-Linces. The snags are that you must pre-book (up to one hour before rental with Avis and Hertz) and you may not be able to get a Few seasoned travelers pay the walk-in or rack-rate" when they rent a car. Discounts come from many quarters; if you're a member of the International Airline Passengers Association, you can claim a discount of up to 20 percent at Hertz and National/Europ-car/Tilden, up to 25 percent at Avis and 10 percent at Thrifty; British Airways Executive Club members get 20 percent off at Avis. SAS offers first and business class passengers (which means everyone who has paid the full economy fare) a special deal with Hertz in 42 cities as part of SAS's Destination Service. This can save you from 11 to 60 percent off the basic tariff. Car rentals can count for up to 1,000 miles in frequent flier programs. You may get a good deal through your travel agent as a corporate discount or as part of a fly-drive arrangement. But most pundits advise dealing direct with a car rent-al company.

Fine Linen And Old Lace

by Terry Trucco

ONDON — Stephen Lunn. 3 London antiques dealer, holds up a big linen sheet, old and worn. Not long ago it might have wound up in a trash heap. But for a small, ardent following, this old sheet is a treasure. Its appeal lies in the soft, smooth feel that crisp new linen lacks. Renewed interest in antique textiles has burnished its popularity - and its price.

That same interest has spawned a new audience for antique lace, another elegant linen product. European lace has its roots in the 16th century, and there's a vast array from which to choose. Late 19th-century collars, flounces and frills are readily available, but a surprising number of early hand-made pieces have also survived. And though prices have risen during the last decade, it is still fairly easy to find good buys. "It's the practical, everyday linens that people seem to want," said Lunn. "With lace, the supply exceeds the demand."

Lunn's shop, on New King's Road, is one of the biggest and most inviting. Lace-trimmed linen sheets, shirts and dresses hang from the rafters like stalactites.

Another dealer, Audrey Field, manages to cram a splendid antique lace selection into the tiniest stall imaginable at Alfie's Antique Mart near Edgware Road. Lace covers the deep green walls, offering a crash course in styles, origins and dates. There's just enough room for a couple of chairs and large lacefilled bureaus, each drawer stuffed with a different era's frills. Yet in nine years. Field's modest ground-floor booth has become an objective for lace collectors from all over the Like many antiques dealers. Lunn is fascinated by what he sells and loves to talk about it. "Linen this strong can even go in the washing machine." Lunn exclaims, holding a 1920s Cyprus linen tablecloth with 12 nap-kins, each decorated with lace. The set sells for around $400. Yet a large 17th-century Italian altar cloth, handwoven and bedecked with lace, is half the price. "The problem is what do you do with it?" Lunn sighed.

History is part of the appeal of both anrique linens and lace. Linen, made from flax, is one of the world's oldest textile libers. For centuries, wealthy Europeans have slept on linen sheets, the very ones, in some cases. that are so popular now, particularly the lace-decorated Victorian examples.

Antique linen's distinct texture is due to the finer thread produced in earlier times: these finer threads form a more densely woven cloth than contemporary thread. Repeated washings also alter the texture. A look through Lunn's magnifying glass shows a big difference between a 19th-century sheet, which looks thick and tightly woven, and a new one, which appears thinner and looser. Washing also changes linen's texture by removing a micromolecular layer from each fiber. Over the years, the fibers grow thinner and softer. Between 15 and 20 washings should soften up new linens.

Those who intend to use antique linens must make certain the sheets are still durable. Folding a soft English sheet with the date 1726 embroidered in a corner, Lunn noted that it would probably rip if it were used. Like other pre-Industrial Revolution linens, this was handwoven and has a distinctive seam where it was sewn to fit a bed ($450 for two sheets and two pillowcases). But a 19th-century French lace-garnished sheet set (about $450) straight out of Proust still has plenty of wear left. Linen sheets from the 1930s and '40s cost around $150, while new ones retail at $350 and up. Most have been bleached white, though some are creamy beige, linen's natural color. (Collectors who sleep only on linen often invest in a special stand-up roller iron for around $900. But some maintain that drying the sheets in the breeze is sufficient.) Lunn also has a large stock of linen garments, including men's shirts, women's nightgowns, lacy blouses and camisoles (from around $50). But most intriguing are his linen sampler shirts, doll-size high-necked embroidered tops ($30 to $150) sewn by novice Victorian seamstresses. Like linens, the laces that are most in demand are those that can be used. whether for clothing or home decoration. Sifting through a drawer, Field selected several examples of lace to be worn - 19thcentury Brussels collars, machine-made Edwardian pieces, and Irish lace and crochet. Pretty and popular, they begin at around

Designers of bridal and evening wear also make regular pilgrimages to lace shops look-ing for one-of-a-kind flounces and handmade veils. "A young bride in Canada wrote and asked me to select a veil for her wed-ding," said Field, who has a large stock of 19th-century bridal veils fashioned from machine-made net and hand applique (from $180). She also has plenty of 19th-century lace wraps and shawls ($60 to $110).

The more zealous lace collectors seek out 17th-century Venetian lace, 18th-century French lace and similar examples, "like a stamp collection," said Field. That impractical aspect has kept prices low for the old, rare pieces. Among the most sought-after collectibles are 18th-century lappets, long decorative strands that were hung from the hair ($600 upwards).

Yet ounce for ounce, lace was once costlier than gold, and the wealthy flaunted their lace like jewels. One 17th-century French nobleman complained, "I have spent nearly 4,000 livres on adorning myself, my wife, my daughter and her children, and in my opinion I have never spent money so uselessly."

Baroque lace makers in France, Belgium and Italy produced laces of extraordinary delicacy and intricacy, employing scores of women for starvation wages. In her excellent history "Lace," Santina Levy, a curator at London's Victoria and Albert Museum, uses wellknown paintings of Europe's aristocracy to illustrate different styles and uses of lace.

"There's not much more you can do with fine old lace, but it is too old and rare to cut up and wear," said Field. "And it has survived all these years."

By the 12th century, the city had evolved into an independent commune on land only, for rich and powerful Venice, across the gulf, ruled the waters of the Adrianic, seizing Trieste's ships and phundering its salt trade. In 1382, Trieste took the drastic step of pledging allegiance to the Duke of Austria, Leopold III. and placing itself under his protection while preserving its adninistrative freedom.

Despite a one-year occupation by Venice and a brief annexation by Spain in the 16th century, not to mention three Napoleonic occupa-tions between 1797 and 1813, Trieste's embrace of the Hapsburgs was one of history's more lasting unions. With the expansion of oceanic trade in the centuries after an Italian sailing under the Spanish flag discovered America in 1492, the mercantile-minded Hapsburg emperor, Karl VI, in 1719 decreed Trieste a free port through which goods could transit - and, in the next century and a half, Trieste's population swelled from 4,000 to 180.000. In 1869, when the opening of the Suez Canal made it the entry point for goods from the Orient, Trieste rivaled Marseille as Europe's leading scaport.

Like a jewel in the Hapsburgs' crown of thorns, Trieste's true wonder perches atop a rocky promontory seven kilometers from the city. The castle of Miramare, a white

As a young sailor who rose to rear admiral and supreme commander of the imperial Austrian navy by the age of 22, Archduke Maximilian, younger brother of finperor Franz Joseph, had made his headquarters in Trieste for four years when, late in 1855, the bora blew his fishing boat into a secluded cove. Celebration of the Conqueror

by Erik de Maunay

AEN, France - In the Calvados region of Normandy, with Caen at its center, lavish preparations are being made to commemorate the 900th anniversary of the death of William, Duke of Normandy, better known as William the Conqueror.

It is fitting that Caen should be the focal point of the ceremonies, since it is here, under his recently restored tombstone in the choir of the Abbaye aux Hommes, that William lies buried. Or rather, all that survives the him, which is one femur in a lead casket, the rest of his remains having been dug up and scattered during the wars of religion and the French Revolution. William built the Abbaye aux Hommes, now the parish church of Saint Etienne, in penance for having mar-ned his fourth cousin, Matilda of Flanders. Manilda is commemorated in the Abbaye aux Dames, on the other side of the city, and has a role of honor in the current festivities.

Ceremonies are also taking place at Falaise, where William was born, and Bayeux, where the celebrated tapestry, commissioned by William's half-brother, the warrior-bishop Odo, vividly depicts the events leading up to the Norman conquest of England.

In Caen, May has been dedicated to Wilham and Matilda. On May 15, in the large open space inside the walls of the chateau, 200 young people in period costumes will re-enact, with songs and dances, the major events of William's reign. The next day, the festive mood will spread even wider, when siant effigies of William and Matilda will be carried from their respective abbeys to meet under the walls of the château, where a medieval banquet, complete with troubadours, jugglers and fire-eaters, will be staged in the evening. On May 17, the two towering effigies will be paraded through the city at the head of a three-hour procession of giant figures, including the luckless loser, Harold, and the sinister poisoner, Mabille de Bel-leme. They will be accompanied by horsemen, clowns, decorated floats and several bands, one coming specially from Sydney. The idea of creating carnival figures sever-al times larger than life has been borrowed from Douai in French Flanders, where they have featured in annual processions for many years past

The massive plaster heads will surmount tall framework bodies made of welded metal reinforcing rods covered with lattices and wickerwork. The dominant figure, William, will stand nearly 25 feet (7.5 meters) tall, carrying a hooded falcon on his wrist. Four men will be needed to carry each of the effigies in procession.

At the other end of the scale, two local artists, Alain Letort and Luc Marie, are creating a multitude of small, two-dimensional pewter figurines — 400 in all — for a triptych which will eventually adorn the altar of Matilda's church, the Abbaye aux Dames. It began when they discovered, in old books and manuscripts, details of an almost-forgotten technique known as plat d'étain. This consists of casting flat pewter figures in molds cut into blocks of a special hard slate which has to be imported from Thuringia, in East Germany, the only place in Europe where it is found. It is a difficult technique, and, Alain Letort said, one which he and his partner had virtually to reinvent, since the instructions given in old manuals proved inadequate and confusing. It takes an average of 15 hours to cut the six small molds in each rectangular block of slate with engraving tools, and after being cast, the tiny figures — court ladies, priests and peasants — have to be painted in authentic colors.
From mid-May through August, in St. George's Church inside the château wall, there will be an exhibition on Norman fortresses from William the Conqueror to Richard Lion-Heart, showing 11th and 12th-century military architecture in all the territories covered by the Norman expansion. In the second half of September, the annual Caen Fair will act as host to the English County of Devon, which is twinned with the Calvados district, with jousting and medieval games to recall the tournaments of William's time. Sept. 3-9 historians from both countries will be attending a conference on Anglo-Norman history and civilization, and Oct. 2-4 there will be a congress on medieval archaeology.

All these activities are merely a setting for the main event. The ceremony to mark the 900th anniversary of William's death will take place in the Abbaye aux Hommes on Wednesday, Sept. 9, in the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales (Prince Charles is a descendant of William).

Why is so much effort is being expended on this anniversary? Of course, civic pride and the need to attract the maximum number of visitors comes into it. But it is perhaps also worth recalling the circumstances of William's death and burial 900 years ago. He was wounded at the battle of Mantes when his horse stumbled and he was thrown forward, impaling himself on the pommel of his saddle. From the battlefield, he was transported to Rouen, where he died in agony. According to the early chronicles, his barons deserted him, and by the time his body was finally brought to Caen for burial, it was in an advanced stage of decomposition. Is it fanciful to conjecture that, by ordering such a lavish panoply of commemorative ceremonies, Caen is making atonement for that earlier dereliction?

Italian Genius in Mussolini's Utopia That Never Was

By David Willey

OME - In Rome, there's still time to see an unusual exhibition - it closes after this weekend - of plans and sketches for a world's fair that never took place, Code-named E42, the fair was to have been the climax of celebrations marking the 20th anniversary of fascist rule in Italy, which began with the march on Rome in 1922.

The exhibition, a modest affair, rather portentously entitled "Utopia and the Scenario of the Regime," is taking place under government sponsorship at Eur, a satellite city of Rome which grew up after the fall of fascism on the site of the aborted world's fair. The sketches and photographs are on display in one of the original fair buildings, which now houses Italy's national archives.

Fifty years after some of Italy's most talented architects, artists and intellectuals submitted their ideas for Mussolini's fair, modestly entitled "The Olympiad of Civilizations," political taboos about fascism still hang in the air. Two generations of Italians have been brought up to believe that fascist art is bad art.

But what immediately strikes the visitor is the high quality of much of the planning for the buildings for the fair. A 1,000-acre site between Rome and the sea was chosen and cleared in preparation for E42. Twenty miles of roads were built, gardens were land-scaped, 14 major buildings arose from their foundations before the project ground to a halt because of the war.

The seven-story Palace of Italian Civilization, one of the few completed buildings, is still the first city landmark glimpsed by the traveler arriving on his way in to Rome from the airport. It was planned to house a gilded equestrian statue of Il Duce.

At first, the plans for E42 sound like so many other 20th-century examples of ideo-logically inspired art. Yet the closer you examine the projects, the more it becomes apparent that E42 would have been something more than mere glorification of the regime. It was a coherent attempt to put on show before the world the genius of Italy. The plans both set a style and reflected new ideas, dramatically ahead of their age.

For example, one of the key exhibition buildings was to have been a 4,500-seat cinema, the largest in the world in the 1940s. A graceful aluminum triumphal arch, its base points planted a third of a mile apart. was to have soured over the exhibition. There was to be a big amusement park. — Mussoli-ni's version of Disneyland.

From the town-planning point of view, the E42 project was revolutionary for Rome, a city that for centuries had developed inside the walls built by the 3d-century emperor, Aurelian, to keep out invaders.

The exhibition has attracted widespread coverage in the Italian press, radio and TV, not all of it favorable. But as Paolo Portoghesi, one of Italy's leading contemporary ar-chitects, points out in his catalogue note, the relationship between the city of Rome and its satellite city at Eur has been "like a complicated family affair, involving conflicting emotions of love, hope, hate and scorn, followed by renewed hope, mixed this time with a sort of guilt complex."

Portoghesi concludes that it is futile to confuse culture with politics. "Would we judge Michelangelo on the basis of the politics of his patron Pope Julius II, or Pinturic-chio on the basis of the misdeeds of Pope Alexander VI?" he asks.

Late 20th-century Rome has become a sprawling mess. An estimated one million buildings have gone up around the city since Mussolini's regime fell without any planning permission at all. High-rise blocks have fortunately been avoided and the skyline inside the city walls of Rome is intact. But a glimpse at Mussolini's imaginary city does provide food for reflection in A.D. 1987. ■

The Struggle for the Third Star

by Victor de la Serna

ADRID - It has taken so long and against what seemed such odds, that Zalacain's third Mi chelin star, awarded last month by the renowned and feared French guidebook takes on an air of vindication for the elified Madrid restaurant. This is the first imea third star has been awarded in Spain, and it comes after restaurants in five other European nations have been so honored. It has been a protracted and uphili struggle, not just for Zalacain, but for Spain's often maligned cuisine.

Although pre-Civil War Michelin guides generously awarded stars throughout Spain. none was given in more recent times until 1974. A year earlier, a company spokesman had justified the absence of stars in its Spanish edition with a statement that stirred widespread protests in Spain's gastronomic circles. "There are very good Spanish restaurants, no doubt," the spokesman said. "But the Spanish way of cooking is different. If we were to award stars, the tourists would expect to find what they will not find." Jesus María Oyarbide, a former merchant marine officer and gastronome turned reslaurateur, did not share that view. In 1974 after successful ventures in his native Navarre and in Madrid — he opened his luxurious but sedate Zalacain with a clear goal in mind: to elevate it to three-star status. From the start, his chef was Benjamin Urdiain, who had left Navarre at 13 to work in various kitchens in southwest France, then at the Plaza-Athénée in Paris.

Thus, the award to Zalacain did not go to one of those self-employed chefs of the new generation, but to a team venture headed by a restaurateur in the same mold as Jean-Claude Vrinat of Taillevent or René Lasserre, in Paris. Ovarbide, 57, gives this description of his relationship to Urdiain, 48, and of the Zalacain operation: "I inspire the dishes, Benjamin interprets them and my wife, Chelo, gives final approval,"

His chef, Oyarbide says, "is a remarkable technician with a great gift for delicacy." That apparently involves more than cooking techniques — the shy Urdiain is famous for never shouting at anyone in his team of 15 cooks; part of a staff of 68. The Zalacain kitchen is a calm, spoiless place where everyone works in silence and seems to know exactly what he has to do.

The Zalacain style "aspires to be high cuisine but always with a Spanish accent, with an effort to update and lighten our own traditions," according to Oyarbide. "I also believe that taste is decisive. With this great passion for presentation in France, I have ocen served some beautiful but totally tasteless dishes, and that's absurd."

Spanish food writers have stressed that it was a distinctively Spanish restaurant that Michelin chose to honor after years of favoring those serving unabashedly French cuisine. This should encourage others who endeavor to modernize Spain's cookery, often demeaned — in France, particularly — as oily and ensubtle. (Indeed, Madrid's El Amparo, where chef Ramón Ramirez combines French and Spanish trends in a decidedly modern fashion, has just received a second star.) But is Michelin really convinced that Spanish cooking is not really second-rate? Some reports indicate that it took a large number of readers' letters to convince its editors to finally elevate Zalacain.

Curiously, some of the latest French fashions have Spanish roots, although the French are wary of admitting it. These go from the use of saffron to that of the escabeche technique for marinades.

Oyarbide says he is "rather amused" by the number of coulis or sauces au poivron (bell pepper) to be found in France now. That is a distinctively Spanish influence.

A decade ago, one of the first Zalacain creations to attract widespread acclaim was fresh saimon with a green bell pepper sauce. The idea was derived from the old Basque fishermen's stew, marmitako, made of fresh tuna and bell peppers. Such study of and improvement on Spanish dishes has been a hallmark of Zalacain. So has been the use of Spanish raw materials, from humble but delicious Navarrese vegetables, such as the newspaper El Pais in Madrid.

sensational peeled broad beans, to a smooth goose foie gras made on a Madrid area farm.

Dishes don't stay forever on the Zalacain menu — the latest version of salmon is one with dill and broad bean sauce. A delightfully spiced duck sausage with mixed salad was introduced recently. Other current offerings include a stew of langostinos (the delicate, pink-and-white striped Mediterranean shrimp) in Basque cider; hake steamed with basil on a bed of chard puree; lamb kidneys roasted in their own fat, with pisto, Spain's nipėrade.

When President François Mitterrand was Prime Minister Felipe González's guest at last month's French-Spanish summit meeting in Madrid, Zalacain was asked to serve the state dinner at Moncloa Palace. The menu: cold Navarrese asparagus cream, scallops with Galician albarino wine, stuffed cabbage with goose and truffles, and a pistachio ice cream with fresh oranges and strawberries and a bitter chocolate sauce.

The great red wines from Rioja and the Douro valley, the fast improving whites from Galicia and Catalonia are duly represented in the fine Zalacain cellar. And, although not exactly cheap, this is probably the least ex-pensive of the 27 three-star restaurants throughout Europe.

Dow Eases on Auction Jitters

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange eased Thursday as nervous traders awaited the outcome of the last stage of Gaining stocks roughly matched the number declining. Volume totaled 185.10 million shares, up from 164.76 million in the same period Wednesday. The Treasure was winding up its refunding The Treasury was winding up its refunding Thursday with the sale of $9.25 billion in 30year bonds. Many analysts regard the auction as pivotal for the U.S. interest-rate outlook.

Although most U.S. stock market tables in this edition are from the 4 P.M. close in New York, for time reasons, this article is based on the market at 3 P.M.

If buyers - in particular, Japanese investors - hid for the bonds in force, observers believe, it might signal a stabilizing dollar in foreign exchanges and relief from the recent upward pressure on interest rates.

But a generally lackluster response to sales of three-year and 10-year notes Tuesday and Wednesday raised some doubts about the attractiveness of U.S. dollar securities, even at recently higher yields.

Hugh Johnson, head of the investment policy committee at First Albany Corp., said that the market was dominated by this nervousness. Mr. Johnson said that the financial markets have been "slugging their way through" this week's Treasury auctions, but that once the bond sales are out of the way, stocks might be able to move higher.

"It was a day totally spent waiting to get results of the auction," agreed Al Goldman, a stock market strategist at A.G. Edwards & Sons in St. Louis.

Mr. Goldman said that futures-related selling pressured the market, which mostly ignored rising bond prices. He contended that the market. ket had enough steam to move the Dow up to just under the 2.400-level, but he said that the "one-note" focus on the Treasury auctions Thursday indicated that investors lacked conviction that the market will move higher.

Noting Thursday's beavy trading volume,
Mr. Goldman observed, "There's a lot of noise but little action."

For an Insect-Free Tree. Try 'Forestry in a Flask'

By ANDREW POLLACK

AVIS, California — In a laboratory here, tall redwoods from little test tubes grow. The laboratory, run by Professor Don J. Durzan of the University of California. nia at Davis, is one of a increasing number of universiby and industrial facilities that are trying to apply the techniques of biotechnology to forestry.

The researchers are trying to mass-produce clones of trees from cells growing in laboratory cultures. They are also beginning to introduce new traits into trees using recombinant DNA technology, which is also known as gene splicing.

The goal of such work is to produce trees that grow faster or are resistant to disease, insects or acid rain. Lumber companies tend to cut the best trees first Through laboratory and are under pressure to recloning, copies of a plenish stocks as fast as they remove them. Trees take dedesirable tree can cades to reach maturity, so there can be a big payoff in be made in large breeding better trees or in reducing the time before trees quantities. can be harvested

TERRANE:

Paper companies would like to have trees that are rich in cellulose, which can yield more paper and less waste products. The same genetic techniques could also be applied to fruit trees, but with the opposite goal: to produce trees with almost no wood. "We're trying to get fruit, not wood," said Mr. Durzan. "Why should we have to have ladders to collect the fruit? Why should we have to prune?" Foresters have tried to produce better trees in the past through conventional breeding, but the task has been far more difficult than with agricultural crops and animals. A new generation of corn can be grown each year, but trees might take 20 years or more to mature and produce the seeds for the next generation. Seeds are also somewhat imprecise. Instead of passing on a desired trait from one parent, they might pass on an undesired trait from the other parent. Once a desirable tree is found, it also might not produce a gright pass on a force. might not produce enough seeds to quickly restock the forest. So foresters are relying more on cloning. With this technique, genetic copies of a desirable tree can be made in large quantities.

UCH OF clonal forestry has been pioneered abroad, said William J. Libby, a forestry and genetics professor at the University of California at Berkeley. Scandina-At the University of California at Berkeley, Scandinavians have cloned Norwegian spruce, and New Zealanders, Monterey pine. The Ontario Ministry of Forests has a huge cloned forest of European poplars.

In the United States, Weyerhaeuser Co. uses cloning for ornamental trees in its nursery business and has a huge pilot project aimed at cloning trees for timber. The Simpson Timber Co. in northern California is cloning coast redwoods.

Cloning has been schieved for years by taking a cutting from a tree and rectine it. But this technique does not work well with tree and rooting it. But this technique does not work well with some conifers, the softwood trees such as pine that are most important for the lumber industry.

A newer technique, known as micropropogation, allows shoots to be generated from the tissues of trees in cultures. This method is in use by some forest companies. A still newer experimental technique, known as somatic embryogenesis, can create multiple embryos from a mass of cells. The embryos can be encapsulated m a get and stored as artificial seeds.

Since the cells can be rapidly multiplied in culture, this technique, pioneered at Davis and a few other labs, could lead to mass production of desirable trees. "You can have hundreds of thousands of embryos in a can liter flask," said Paul Webb, chief scientist at Agrogen Biotechnologies, a forest genetics company in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Forest biotechnology, sometimes dubbed "forestry in a flask," still faces numerous obstacles. Scientists still can't dependably get whole trees to grow from cells or from embryos. The process also is still too expensive for widespread use, and there are environmental risks. A forest of cloned trees could lack genetic diversity, so that a disease that kills one tree would kill them all.

Seoul To Prepay 3 Loans

Foreign Banks Get $1.4 Billion

HONG KONG - In an effort to reduce South Korea's politically embarrassing buildup of foreign reserves, government-owned institutions are planning to prepay three loans to international banks this month totaling $1.4 billion, bankers said Thursday.

The move accelerates a policy signaled in February when the gov-ernment said it would prepay a $650 million loan.

The reserves have grown because of Scoul's aggressive export policy. which last year produced a $4.6 billion surplus on its current account, the widest trade measure.

Foreign bankers have said that the repayment policy is serving a dual purpose. First, it will reduce the reserves and therefore the pressure from the United States and other nations for Seoul to revalue its currency and thereby make its exports somewhat less attractive.

But it will also assure a better reception for the country when it renegotiates much of the remaining debt in line with the worldwide reduction in lending terms, bankers said. Of South Korea's $44.5 billion in foreign debt, about $35 billion is owed to commercial banks.

Bankers here said that Korea Exchange Bank would prepay $500 million May 26, while Korea Development Bank and Korea Export-Import Bank will prepay $600 million and $300 million on May

The loan to be prepaid by Korea Development Bank, for example, was signed in October 1984. It carried an eight-year maturity and charged initially 5/8 percentage point over the benchmark London nterbank offered rate, or Libor, ising to 3/4 point later.

The development start. The development bank is already seeking better terms for a $500 million loan signed in 1983. This also had an eight-year maturity, but the bank wants the lending margins to be 1/8 to 1/4 points over Libor.

But Steel Sector Is Anemic, and Union Is Angry

largest steel plant, in Gary, Indiana, houses the company's most modern piece of steelmaking equipment: a year-old continuous easter that has slashed energy costs and helped productivity

With the help of such technology, and with the longest work stoppage in the industry's history behind them, USX officials believe that the nation's largest steelmaker is on the road to achieving the robust profitability that has eluded it for more than a decade.

The new casters, combined with the 15 percent reduction in labor costs won in the stoppage and the recent indefinite closing of four of its eight plants, will enable USX's steel business to regain its financial health, they

But despite USX's progress in cutting costs and improving efficiency, the company faces a host of challenges. American demand for steel is still anemic, competitors are making similar progress in cutting their costs and the wounds inflicted by the six-month labor dispute have yet to

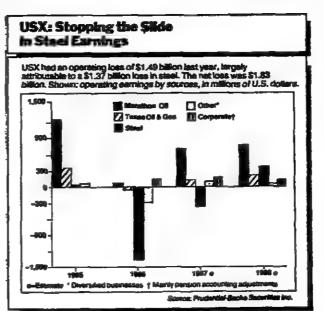

But while USX officials talk proudly of their new equipment, workers at Gary angrily complain about what they call unsafe work conditions. Although the company disputes their conten-tion, union officials say plant accidents are on the rise — a result, they insist, of USX's drive to reduce the size of its work force.

"They've laid people off and talk about all this higher produc-tivity, but what they've done is to make this place unsafe," said Larry Regan, president of Local 1014 of the United Steelworkers union, which represents Gary's 4,300 hourly workers. "The feeling among the workers toward the company is about as bad as I've ever seen."

CGE Offering Is Set to Raise 24 Billion FF

By Axel Krause International Herald Tribune

PARIS - In what would be France's largest securities offering ever, the government said Thurs-day it would sell its holding in Compagnie Générale d'Electricité to the public for 290 francs a share, or nearly 24 billion francs (about $4 billion).

The sale will take place in three steps, beginning Monday with an offering to the public of 27.7 miltion shares, representing 70 percent of CGE's capital or about 8 billion francs. The offer will be open until May 23, the ministry said.

Ten percent of the total 39.6 million shares being sold will be offered to company employees, or retired employees, at discounts of up to 20 percent. A maximum of 20 percent will be offered to foreign investors, mainly in West Europe-an capitals and in the United States, representing 7.9 million shares, or about 2.3 billion francs. The second step, which was announced last month, is a new issue of 21.8 million shares that would generate 6.3 billion francs. The third step is the conversion of 21 million of CGE's nonvoting shares outstanding, or about 6.1 billion francs, into the new shares. That offer will be open until June

The U.S. offering, which is ex-pected to generate about 400 milion francs, followed a significant easing of rules for foreign investors established by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. The change was made after lobbying by French officials and U.S. bankers and investors. Several U.S. institutional investors bought relatively small amounts in Compagnie Financière de Paribas and Compagnie de Saint-Gobain, when they were denationalized.

The ministry said that offers for the 2.75 million shares being made available now for perma-nent shareholders must be submitted by June 9.

"We have set a precedent here," said Evan G. Galbraith, a former U.S. ambassador to France and now a director of Morgan Stanley International, a New York invest-ment bank. The bank directed CGE's offering.
"Thanks to the SEC ruling, we now are able to offer large amounts of shares in a major French company - simultaneously inside and outside the United States," Mr. Galbraith said.

Financial analysis, brokers and bankers in Paris and New York said that although the share price was slightly higher than anticipated, the offering would prove attractive to investors.

"Clearly, the French public will find the offer attractive," said J. Paul Horne, the Paris-based economist of Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

Hanoi Uses Mobil Find To Start Exporting Oil

By Michael Richardson

International Herald Tribune SINGAPORE - Vietnam has started to export crude oil on a trial basis from a new offshore field, a development that will reduce its dependence on the Soviet Union for vital petroleum supplies. The field, discovered by Mobil Corp. of the United States in the closing stages of the Vietnam war, has been brought into production with Soviet assistance. Officials in Hanoi have forecast that Vietnam will be self-sufficient in oil and exporting to foreign buyers by 1990. They said that the first cargo of nearly 550,000 barrels was sent recently to Japan for refining. This was confirmed in Tokyo. Nguyen Van Linh, leader of Vietnam's ruling Communist Par-ty, was quoted by Hanoi radio as saying that the oil industry would play a central role in reviving the country's economy.

Mr. Linh, who was elected at a party congress in December, heads a group of Vietnamese leaders who want to apply a more pragmatic form of socialism. Their approach involves greater use of material incentives, small-scale private enterprise, the decentralization of economic controls and foreign investment. Several Western oil companies, including Petrolina SA of Belgium. Broken Hill Pry. of Australia. Agip SpA of Italy, Societe Nationale Elf Aquitaine of France and Kaiyo Oil Ltd. of Japan, have held talks with Hanoi over the past 18 months about terms for participating in offshore oil exploration and pro-

Other oil industry sources in Singapore who have visited Vietnam said they believed that some Vietnamese officials want a renewal of Western involvement. But Soviet officials have contended that it is better to simply buy the necessary technology and equipment from the West, the sources said.

The Soviet Union became Vietnam's sole foreign partner in 1981 after the last of four Western oil companies - from Canada, West Germany, Italy and France -

Since then, two advanced oil exploration rigs, a crane vessel and other equipment have been ordered from Singapore, which is the main oil service and construction center in Southeast Asia. Mr. Linh has sold oil workers that production of crude this year should reach more than two million barrels, seven times the 1986 out-

Nguyen Ngoc Cu, deputy direc-tor-general of Vietsovpetro, said in October in an interview with the Vietnamese Communist Party daily. Nhan Dan, that oil output is expected to reach more than 17 million barrels a year by 1990.

That is the equivalent of about 46,600 barrels a day of crude. It is only a fraction of the 1.2 million barrels a day produced by Indone-sia and the 600,000 barrels a day produced by Malaysia, Southeast Asia's two main oil exporters.

IMF Denies Zambia's Charge Amid Concern Over Its Image

By Clyde H. Farnsworth
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — For the first time, the International Monetary Fund has openly challenged criti-cism by one of its members amid rising concern over its image in the Third World.

The unusual exchange between the fund's managing director, Mi-chel Camdessus, and Zambia's president, Kenneth Kaunda, also points up the financial pressures on Zambia. Like other African nations, Zambia is paying far more to the IMF than it receives in loans.

Zambia, which owes $1 billion to to 10 percent of its export earnings. and cooperative relations."

According to press reports from Lusaka, Zambia, Mr. Kaunda then accused the IMF of waging a "smear campaign" to destroy the Zambian economy. In December, at least 15 persons died in riots after the price of maize meal, Zambia's staple food, dot-bled. The government had ended the maize subsidies at the advice of the IMF. In a telex made public Wednesday by the IMF, Mr. Camdessus responded to Mr. Kaunda's remarks, declaring, "I can state unequivocally that such reports have no foundation.

New York Times Service NEW YORK — The New York Commodity Exchange returned to normal trading hours Thursday after three consecutive sessions shortened by more than two hours so that a backlog of transactions in gold and silver could be sorted out. sorted out.

sorted out.

The exchange's board voted Wednesday to restore normal hours, but in spite of outward signs that stability is returning, there were indications that the Comex is still recling from last week's hectic silver trading.

Even though exchange officials and brokerages have been working feverishly, many of the trades executed on April 27, when the price of silver moved by more than 40 percent in the space of eight minutes, are still unmatched.

The Chicago Board of Trade, which trades smaller silver and gold contracts, informed major precious metals companies Wednesday that it would waive entry and clearing fees through the end of May if the companies wanted to trade silver in Chicago instead of on the Comex.

Dr Balraj Maharshi

Ayurveda, the most ancient traditional system of natural medicine in the world, revived and raised to its full dignity by Maharishi, presents the most complete and scientifically developed programme for perfect health. It recommends that the herbs growing in a country be used for the prevention and cure of illness, preservation of health, and promotion of longevity for the people of that country. Maharishi Ayurveda is the only system of health which can create a society free from sickness and suffering because of its emphasis on prevention, absence of harmful side-effects, and cost-effectiveness. Maharishi Ayurveda Prevention Centres are being opened throughout the world in response to the worldwide awakening for the use of natural medicine. Maharishi Ayurveda offers perfect health for the individual and also perfect collective health for society, the nation, and all mankind—world health, which necessarily includes world peace, world prosperity, world happiness, and an ideal family of nations. On the occasion of the General Assembly of the World Health Organization it is our joy to offer Maharishi's World Plan for Perfect Health to fulfil the goals of WHO-to create a disease-free society and bring selfsufficiency in health care to every nation.'

The two leaders thus hope to help boost Japan's domestic demand for foreign goods and, in conjunction with a rise in U.S. interest rates, stabilize the yendollar exchange rate.

In providing liquidity to the money market, the bank bought two-month bills with an interest rate of 3.81 percent, the sources said. It reportedly bought certificates of deposit totaling 100 billion yen Wednesday.

Co. opened an ultramodern integrated steel mill Thursday, boosting the country's steel-making capacity to 17.5 million metric tons (19.25 short tons), the seventh-largest among Western nations.

Just two years ago, before launching its controversial plan to expand the steel industry. Pohang ranked 15th in capacity.

"The new mill is the most advanced steel plant in the world," a company spokesman said. "We can produce steel at lower prices than

The mill at Kwangyang, on the south coast, uses continuous casting and robots for an annual capacity of 2.7 million tons. It cost $1.95 billion, and the company plans to build two similar mills, one also at Kwangyang by 1991.

South Korea is now 85 percent self-sufficient in meeting demand for steel from its car, machinery, shipbuilding and construction

In response to criticism that the new plants would add to overcapacity in the steel industry worldwide, officials said that domestic demand would grow 10 to 15 percent annually, outstripping produc-

With all of its problems and uncertainties, USX is foolish not to make peace with its workers, said both Mr. Kirkwood, the former Jones & Laughlin executive, and F. Kenneth Iverson, the head of Nucor Corp., a steelmaker noted for cooperation between labor and management USX leaders, however, do not appear to have any great desire to change their ways. "We have tried to be responsible and sensitive to our employees." said Mr. Graham, the president of USX's steel unit. Although relations with the union are less than cordial, those with workers are "excellent," he said.

That is not what United Steelworkers officials or most others in the steel industry say.

USX's drive to improve productivity, along with cutbacks that took more than 6,000 hourly workers off the payroll in the four years preceding the shutdown, have taken a toll on morale.

With smaller work crews and longer shifts, employees complain that they are paying a steep price for USX's gains in productivity.

The number of accidents and serious burns at the Gary plant, for instance, rose to 38 in 1985 from 4 in 1984, according to Mr. Regan and other union officials. The deaths last year of two steelworkers were a direct result of the smaller crew sizes. Mr. Regan said. The workers were trapped by seeping argon gas while completing a main-tenance job.

THE LAMBERTS: George, Constant and Kit, by Andrew Motion. Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 19 Union Square West, New York, N. Y. 10003.

"Be regular and orderly in your life like a bourgeois. Flaubert declared once, "so that you may be violent and original in your work."

Of course, for all the artists who have tried to make such discipline a cornerstone of their creative lives, there remain those who have sought to embrace what Rimbaud called the "systematic derangement of the senses." And the image of the self-destructive artist retains a powerful place in our cultural mythology, not only gratifying our more romantic yearnings but also assuaging the puritan in us by provid-ing a sort of object lesson in the costs and consequences of careless living.

With the Lamberts, Andrew Motion — an accomplished poet, critic and editor in Britain — has found three generations of a family that embody that lesson while also embracing a century of cultural ferment. Though publicity for the book has dwelled on the sensationalistic aspects of the Lamberts' story, the volume on

NIXON: The Education of a Politician 1913-

1962, by Stephen E. Ambrose, Simon & Schuster, 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York,

The first thing you notice is the lack of psychohistory in Stephen E. Ambrose's transfixing biography, "Nixon: The Education of a Politician 1913-1962," which takes the former president from birth to the notorious "last president from birth to the notorious "last press conference" ("You won't have Nixon to kick around anymore.") held after his loss of the California gubernatorial contest in 1962.

What with Bruce Mazlish's "In Search of Nixon: A Psychohistorical Inquiry." David Abrahamsen's "Nixon vs. Nixon: An Emotional Tragedy," and Fawn M. Brodie's "Richard Nixon: The Shaping of His Character." there has been so much probing of the Nixos psyche in the last 15 years that you expect at least a little Oedipal conflict from the most detailed work on Nixon to date.

But Ambrose — a biographer of Dwight D. Eisenhower and a professor of history at the University of New Orleans — isn't serving up any. No survival guilt over the death of the two brothers. No signs of self-abasement connected to the document signed, "Your good dog. Richard." which, Ambrose asserts, can't in any

By knitting together the most colorful strands from all the previous published works by and about his subject, Ambrose has managed to surpass the vividness of any one of them, even Nixon's own highly fascinating, if self-serving, autobiographical work, "Six Crises." kerchiefs from a single tiny thimble. In "Un-stuck," a young wife and husband engaged in getting their car out of a snowdrift achieve in their joint effort the climax of cooperation that had cluded them the night before. In "Learn a Trade," a highly successful scrap-iron sculptor, Fegley, realizes the truth of his father's warning, "Get a solid trade, and then you can fool around with this artsy-craftsy stuff." And as always with Updike's writing, there is the dazzling variety of perception to which his restless and inquisitive imagination transports him. Best of all, his talent for ultrafine observation has taken on more muscle. There is less writing for writing's sake here. The proportion of prose to event is far better balanced.

UTRECHT, Netherlands - The not at the soccer match in March between Den Hang and Ajax, two of the best teams in the Netherof the best teams in the Netherlands, was ecrily familiar. It started with shorts being exchanged by ri-val fans, escalated into bottles being hurled and evolved into a vicious battle that left scores of people injured.

The fighting did not degenerate into a fatal replay of the May 1985 not at Heysel Stadium in Brussels, which left 39 persons dead. But it did vividly show that soccer vioience, largely viewed as a British affliction, has infected one of Western Europe's most prosperous and permissive societies.

> This program has its flaws — at one of the Utrecht team's away game, Mr. van Bochove was caught in a clash between fans and police and received some nasty blows on his back by an officer — but on the other hand, Mr. van Bochove has scored some notable coups in the annals of crowd control. Faced with a high-risk match in Rotterdam earlier this year, he convinced several hundred Utrecht fans, waiting at the train station, to forgo the trip and instead watch the game on a large television screen in the deserted stadium in Utrecht.

The violence by Utrecht fans has fallen sharply since his program began two years ago, and police officials from other cities now seek Mr. van Bochove's advice. BOSTON - Demis Johnson and Fred Roberts each made two free throws in the game's last 29 seconds Wednesday night to give the Boston Celties a 126-124 victory over the Milwaukee Bucks and a 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven Eastern Confernce semifinal of the National Basketball Association playoffs.

Milwaukee had tied at 122 on Sidney Moncrief's two foul shots with 43 seconds left. Johnson then drove the lane and was fouled by Jack Sikma, his free throws making it 124-122 with 29 seconds to go.

Milwaukee's Paul Pressey followed with a drive to the basket, but when three Celtics converged on him he missed the shot and the Celtics' Larry Bird rebounded the ball with 14 seconds to play. Terry Cummings was forced to foul Roberts, who sank his two free throws with six seconds left. Sikma's basket, with three seconds left, accounted for the final margin. Although the Bucks had nearly done what no team has in almost five months — beat the Celtics in Boston Garden — Moncrief said that "a loss is a loss. It doesn't injured Thursday when hit by the Renault 5 GT turbo driven by François Orsini during the opening stage of the Tour of Corsica world championship rally and four were slightly hurt when hit by the Open Manta of Guy Fiori.

The Tour of Corsica has been marred by tragedy. Attilio Bettega of Italy died instantly in 1985 when his Lancia 037 hit a telegraph pole and last year Henri Toivonen of Finland and his co-driver, Sergio Cresto, an Italo-American, were burned to death after crashing in their Lancia Delta. Oxford Crew Gets U.S. President

OXFORD. England (AFP) - Chris Penny, one of the five Americans involved in Oxford University's rowing contro versy this year, has been elected president of the boat club.

Penny, dropped from the Oxford crew five weeks before its victory over Cambridge, was elected Wednesday night. He beat out Tom Cadoux-Hudson, one of the oarsmen promoted to replace the Americans, by a vote of 27-17 in a secret ballot of college boat club captains and resident blues.

Penny replaced Donald Macdonald, who dropped the Americans and nominated Cadoux-Hudson for president.

Capote Back in Bonus Field

LOUISVILLE. Kentucky (AP) — Triple Crown Produc-tions has reversed its stand and declared Capote still eligible for the new $1 million bonus for horses running in all three legs of the Triple Crown, even though jockey Angel Cordero eased Capote in the final yards of the Kentucky Derby. That left derby winner Alysheba and 15 other thoroughbreds in contention for the bonus because they crossed the derby finish line; prerace favorite Demons Begone was pulled up in the backstretch after bleeding badly.

The bonus, for the best combined finish, is based on a point system, with Alysheba now having five points, Bet Twice two and Avies Copy one. Points will be assigned in similar fashion for the Preakness Stakes and the Belmont Stakes.

world champion, said he regretted never having driven in the Mille Miglia. It was canceled after an accident 30 years ago that killed the Marquis de Portago, his American co-driver, Edward Nelson, and more than a dozen spectators. That 1957 race, won by Piero Taruffi in a Ferrari, effectively marked the end of the cross-country road-racing era of auto racing. In the past decade street races have become popular, but these are run on temporary circuits of a mile or so, lined with concrete barriers protecting the spectators, not the single huge lap of a country that characterized events like the Mille Miglia.

competition cars built during the 30-year span of the race's existence. Martin Swig, a San Francisco car dealer, and John Lamm, a journalist, were the only Americans in the rally that year, sharing an Alfa Romeo 1900. Swig who is also among this year's U.S. entourage of 52, recalled the 80-mph (129 kph) police escorts they received through the towns along the way, and the response of the spectators that year. "It was total pandemonium, but in the end it all worked out OK. When we stopped, people would crowd around our car, reaching in to touch us. We were treated like visiting astronauts or the pope."

Stirling Moss set the speed record for the Mille Miglia in 1955, driving a Mercedes-Benz 300 SLR to victory in 10 hours 7 minutes 48 seconds, an average of nearly 100 mph. Last year, Moss drove a Maserati 200 S, but this time it took 2½ days, including time for meals and overnight hotel stays along the route.

Ron's Pen Pal in Tokyo

By Russell Baker Dear Prime Minister Nakasone: After having Nancy think it over.

I think you made a lot of sense in our trade talk, so I am enclosing some brochures. You said Japan would love to buy American if only we offered great American products that Japan can't make for itself. For starters, how about some of the beauties in these brochures?

Incidentally, is Nakasone your first or last name? Mao Zedong's last name was Mao, even though it came first. Of course, he was Chinese and the Chinese may be different from Japanese, but if your last name is really Yasuhiro please forgive me calling you Prime Minister Nakasone.

Sincerely yours, etc.

Dear President Reagan: Thank you for the beautiful brochures. There is an old Japanese saying: "Those who say America Yours in awe, etc.

P.S. "Yaz" was a great baseball player, not a great TV series.

Dear Var. meantime, let me assure you that Nakasone is my last name. With your usual infallible instinct, you are absolutely right about Japanese customs differing from the Chinese. Yasuhiro is my first name, and being familiar with your great American custom of calling utter strangers by their first names, I should be deeply honored if you would call me Yasuhiro.

Yours in gratitude, etc.

Dear Yasuhiro: Your letter and beautiful stateof-the-art TV and VCR machines arrived the same day. Nancy wanted me to send them right back with thanks. No way could we be caught at this moment in history with the make riouse, she said. I agreed until I tried a cassette tape of "Brother Rat" on the VCR. Talk about quality! I have never seen better picture quality. No new """ you see how it is Box Well. let politics part me from equipment like that. Have you ever seen "Brother Rat"? It is not great, but it has some fine work in it. Yours for greater viewing, etc. P.S. Yasuhiro is a mouthful. Do you mind if I shorten it and call you Yaz"? There used to be a great TV series called "Yaz." By the way, to you I'm "Ron" from now on, OK?

Dear Ron:

My experts examining the brochures are most impressed by the incredibly beautiful thermonuclear bomb. "So far beyond our capacity to build that it makes us look pathetic," their report said. I am told. however, that its only use is to prevent it from ever being used. As we Japanese are still a primitive people, I fear few people will pay such startling prices for a product that exists solely to prevent itself from being used.

Thanks for sending the video cassette of "Brother Rat." The title had led me to expect a humdinger of a thriller on the order of a Godzilla movie, but disappointment was diminished by the pleasure of seeing my old friend Ron playing a college lad. Next time could you send some of the old early Cagney flicks, which are almost as hard to find in Tokyo as they are in Ameriknew "Yaz" had something to do with a series, and you're right. Nancy says it wasn't a TV series, it was the World Series.

Was that a definite no on the Hbomb? Don't be too hasty, old buddy. Buying a few dozen of those beauties and delivery hardware to match could solve our trade problem overnight for less than a hundred billion dollars. Cap Weinberger says if you only want stuff that can be used he can get you plenty of $600 toilet seats made to the most rigorous Pentagon standards. Your pal in commerce, etc. Dear pal Ron:

Looking over your brochures again, I told my Committee On Keeping Competition Out Of Ja-Thanks for the "G-Men" with Cagney. What a lousy colorizing job. We will soon have a process that will not make all the actors look embalmed.

Dear Yaz:

Regretfully, etc.

What's an Edsel? Your pal. etc. New York Times Service

Sidney Poitier: Back to Acting

By Aljean Harmetz

S AN DIEGO — Sidney Poitier was, for a long time, the only black man in a rarefied white world: He was Hollywood's one black movie star. Now, at 60, after a 10-year absence from the screen, he is once again acting in a movie. It is a measure of how things have changed that the role he is playing in "Little Nikita" was written for a white man.

There was a time, he said recently, "when it was difficult manageable but difficult - to be the only black actor of prominence in films."

"It invited an excruciating sense of responsibility," he said. "To be the only black person on the entire MGM lot except for the shoeshine boy."

Thirty-five years ago, when Poitier was, as he described himself, "a fairly naïve young black boy inventing himself," he "could not have imagined" a future in which a role would be given with-out regard to the color of his skin. But this is a time when a Lou Gossett, a Danny Glover, a Den-zel Washington, a Bill Cosby, an Eddie Murphy and a Sidney Poitier can and are able to work at parts that they are suited to as personality forces," he said, with unmasked pride. "Nothing is hung on the ethnicity of the FBI agent I play in 'Little Nikita.' Whether he is played by Paul Newman or Jack Nicholson or Sidney Poitier will only be of significance in the kind of muance and energy we as actors bring to it. There's not enough of this yet, but the beginning is very appreciated by me. It sure as hell is quite a satisfying time for me."

Poitier stopped acting 10 years ago to write his autobiography. "I thought there were times in my life-in Hollywood that needed to be set down, because of its uniqueness," he said. It took him two years to write "This Life." There was no single reason why he did not return to acting when the book was finished. "It became more and more difficult to go back because the kind of material Hollywood was offering even to gifted American actors - Redford, Newman, Hoffman - was not becoming to their stature," he said, referring to the emphasis on teen-age movies that followed the success of "Star Wars" and "Ani-mal House." He did not need the money acting would bring because his agent, Martin Baum, had arranged for him to get a percentage of the profits from many of his films. "And I think he got bored," said his friend Leonard Goldberg, the president of 20th Century-Fox. Sidney found the parts he was being offered were the same kinds of parts he had already played."

Now Hollywood is once again wooing adult audiences, and Poitier is - he calls it serendipity starring in three movies back to back. He follows Columbia's "Little Nikita" with Disney's "In the Hall of the Mountain King" and another Columbia picture, "Hard Knox." They are action melodramas designed to make a profit but, he said, all three involve real relationships between The producer of "Little Nikita." Harry Gittes, needed a star-but despaired of getting one because the emotional heart of the movie is the role played by River Phoenix, Poitier's 16-year-old costar,. "The kid owns the picture," Gittes said.

The movie pits Poinier's FBI agent against the boy's parents, who are Soviet spies, while the boy is torn between his parents and his country. Like Jack Nicholson, who took the minor role of the retired astronaut in "Terms of Endearment, Poitier shrugged off the status games he could have played. "Some of the scenes were wonderfully well-drawn." he said by way of explaining his choice.

Chris Bonington said Wednesday, his climbing team recently discover ered a creature's footprints in snow on an unscaled Himalayan peak, again raising questions about the existence of a "Yeti," or Abominable Snowman. Bonington, 52, said his five-man British-Norwegian team photographed the (cotprints at about 16,000 feet (5,000 meters) up the 23,237-foot Menglunguse. The photographs have not yet been developed, he said. His climbing colleague, Jim Fotheringham, 34, said the prints were foot-shaped, hand-sized and measuring about 7 by 4 inches (17 by 10 centimeters). The two men returned to Britain Wednesday after an unsuccessful attempt to conquer the peak.

Vladinir Nabokov was given to waspish comments on his fellow, Russian writers, letters by him tevealed. Although admiring the po-etry of Boris Pasternak, Nabokov described Pasternak's novel "Dr. described Pasternak's novel "Dr. Zhivago" as "morbid, gif tless, phony and entirely anti-liberal." He said the prose of Alexander Solzhenitsyn, author of "The Gulag Archipelago." was "even weaker" than that of Pasternak. Nabokov made the comments in letters to the critic Gleb Strave, who had been a friend since their student days in England. Nabokov died in 1977. The letters will be auctioned by Sotheby's in London May 21.
